You know what this closing bell ringing needs?

Yeah, that's right: More cowbell. Four hundred more, to be exact. Georgetown University McDonough School of Business students did the New York Stock Exchange closing bell honors cowbell-style Sept. 28 prior to a panel discussion focusing on the role capital markets play in job creation. Special guest stars at the bell ringing included, (just above the sign) third from left, Ricardo Ernst, deputy dean, McDonough School of Business, Lawrence Leibowitz of NYSE Euronext, McDonough Professor Reena Aggarwal, and George Daly, dean of the McDonough School of Business.

Building up the builders

As part of Architecture Week, the local chapter of the American Institute of Architects honored its own Sept. 24 during a luncheon at Farmers & Fishers. On the list of honorees, which included WBJ's editor and all-around architecture fan Doug Fruehling, were (RIGHT) Steven Spurlock of Wnuk Spurlock Architecture, center, and former Maryland Gov. Parris Glendening, here with Yolanda Cole of Hickok Cole Architects. (BELOW): Taking in the ceremony were Kathryn Prigmore of HDR Architecture and Yoshihiko Sano of Yasui Architects & Engineers.
